WHAT IS RHETORIC?

Rhetoric is “the art of effective or persuasive speaking or writing, especially the use of figures of speech and other compositional techniques.”

Analyzing Rhetoric

To analyze rhetoric, follow the steps below.

1. Identify the relationship between the speaker, subject, and audience—often, much of this information can be found in the prompt of a Q2 essay.
2. As you read the passage, chunk by primary points. This can be determined by asking yourself: “What is the author pointing out to the audience?” There may be one primary point for several paragraphs.
3. Take note of textual evidence that appeals ethically, logically, or emotionally to the audience or strengthens the speaker’s credibility.
4. Examine the speaker’s purpose for writing the passage. Consider which primary points best support his/her purpose.

Rhetorical Appeals

There are three main types of rhetorical appeals that speakers and writers make. These appeals are the result of rhetorical choices that an author makes within a text.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>APPEAL TO AUTHORITY</th>
<th>APPEAL TO EMOTION</th>
<th>APPEAL TO LOGIC</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| When appealing to authority, the author can present details or evidence of any of the following to establish their own credibility:
  • Experience
  • Moral character
  • Credentials
  • Accolades | An author or speaker can effectively accomplish their goal by making their audience feel any one of a wide variety of emotions, including (but not limited to):
  • Sympathy
  • Sadness
  • Anger
  • Joy
  • Pride
  • Fear | This appeal can be accomplished by supplying any of the following:
  • Facts
  • Statistics or data
  • Evidence
  • Rational and logical argument |

Writing the Analysis

Inadequate: Lincoln begins his speech by using ethos. He tells his audience that “at this second appearing to take the oath of the Presidential office there is less occasion for an extended address than there was at the first.” This makes the audience trust him.

Adequate: Lincoln begins his speech with a precise tone, informing his audience that “no prediction in regard to the [progress of arms] is ventured.” This matter of fact attitude reflects how Lincoln is tired of the war and ready to move forward as he hopes the audience will be after listening to his address.

Sophisticated: To begin his speech, Lincoln apprises the audience of his executive experience and acknowledges that there is “less occasion” for long dialogue. This salutation mirrors the morale of the war-ravaged country and entices his audience to continue to listen to a “detail of a course” that hopes to repair the nation.

The preceding examples were constructed from Abraham Lincoln’s “Second Inaugural Speech.” You can visit the prompt and the passage on page 2 of the document found at https://secure-media.collegeboard.org/apc/eng_lang_fraq_02_10330.pdf

MAIN IDEA, PURPOSE, AND TONE

Whether analyzing a multiple-choice passage or a free response question, there are three general characteristics that you must examine.

Main Idea

• Refers to the content of the passage.
• Answers the question “What is this passage about?”

Purpose

• Related to Main Idea, but not the same.
• Answers the question “What does the speaker hope to accomplish through the main idea?”

Tone

• Refers to the author’s attitude about their subject.
• As you read through the passage, circle any extreme words, and look for images and associations and consider how the collection of tone words affect the audience. How would that effect help the speaker achieve his purpose?

When writing a rhetorical analysis, it is important to address how a writer’s rhetorical choices affect the audience by appealing to one of these six universal topics:

• Moral
• Spiritual
• Political
• Social
• Psychological
• Historical

Justification: In the first example, the student states that Lincoln “uses ethos.” This is a common mistake—a speaker cannot “use” ethos (or logos or pathos for that matter); however, a speaker will make a choice that establishes credibility with the audience. While the adequate paragraph is “technically correct,” it lacks an explanation of how Lincoln’s words would induce the audience to move forward. A sophisticated writer analyzes how a rhetorical choice creates a logical or emotional impact on an audience and examines what sort of assumptions a writer made about his audience to make such an appeal successful.
Understanding diction is essential to doing well in AP® English Language. Sure, diction in the literal sense may simply be the “distinctive vocabulary choices and style of expression” an author/speaker uses. But truthfully, there are layers and stages to what diction is and how good writers use it.

Diction affects the tone and complexity of a text. It can make a text formal and elevated or informal and casual, make it strong or weak, and diction can even identify the speaker—Shakespeare comes to mind. If you can learn to speak intelligently about the author’s use of diction, you can own this test!

Denotation and Connotation

Every word has two kinds of meaning:

- Denotation is the dictionary definition of a word.
- Connotation is the feeling a word conveys.

Consider these two versions of another sentence:

- Angry students protest dress code policies.
- Outraged students riot against dress code policies.

The difference between these two sentences is caused largely by the connotations of the bolded words: “angry” and “outraged” have the same denotation: they both mean something like “mad.” But “angry” students sound like they could be calmed down, while “outraged” students must have their concerns addressed. What about “protest” versus “riot”? Do they have the same denotation? What about their connotations?

HOW WRITERS MANIPULATE DICTION

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Qualifying Language</th>
<th>Imagery</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Authors can manipulate the degree of doubt or certainty of something by using qualifying words.</td>
<td>Here are some words used to describe Rome in a passage from The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire by Edward Gibbon:</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| • The following words indicate a lack of certainty:
  - could, may, might, perhaps, hope, sometimes | • swelled, ripened, decay
  The words describe the decline and fall of the Roman Empire in a way that makes it sound like an overripe fruit. What if those words were changed to less image-laden ones?
  • grew, matured, decline
  These words would give a less nuanced, less dramatic description. |
| • Using more absolute language indicates more certainty:
  - first, only, never, always, must | Adjectives for Describing Diction |
| • An author can also indicate criticism by using works like the following:
  - predictable, dubious, fantastical, unexceptional | high or formal | low or informal | neutral |
| | precise | exact | concrete |
| | abstract | plain | simple |
| | homespun | esoteric | learned |
| | cultured | literal | figurative |
| | connotative | symbolic | picturesque |
| | sensuous | literary | provincial |
| | colloquial | slang | idiomatic |
| | neologistic | inexact | euphemistic |
| | trite | obscure | pedantic |
| | bombastic | grotesque | vulgar |
| | jargon | emotional | obtuse |
| | moralistic | ordinary | scholarly |
| | insipid | proper | pretentious |
| | old-fashioned | | |

Why Diction Matters

Writers carefully consider which words to use to best accomplish their rhetorical goals.

Consider the evolution of the following sentence:

- The stone looked like it could roll down the hill.
- The rock was about to crash down the mountain.
- The boulder was destined to come crashing down the cliff.

The sentence starts out without a lot of excitement, but it gets progressively more dramatic with each version. Each sentence conveys more or less the same idea, but each one fulfills a different rhetorical purpose.

HOW TO TALK ABOUT DICTION:

In the free-response section of the test, it isn’t enough to just bring diction up; you have to be specific about it. First give a description of the type of language the author uses—is it objective? Subjective? Literal? Abstract? Then be sure to explain why an author has used particular words and how those words helped achieve a specific purpose.
Context:
Truth is speaking at a Women's Convention, so we can assume her audience is likely to be sympathetic to her message about Women's Rights and interested in her personal story. Crucially, the speech is situated in the North in 1861 before the Civil War.

Audience:
An audience includes all the people who will listen to a speech or read a text (i.e., the primary audience) and the wider public who will read a copy of the speech in the future (i.e., the secondary audience). Based on the what you know about Sojourner Truth and the context of the speech, you can make assumptions about the audience based on the following questions.

—What conclusions can you draw based on the contextual informational?
—Based on the religious appeals that Truth uses in her speech, what can we assume about her audience?
—What other ideas, beliefs, values, or needs of the audience are revealed through Truth's speech?

Purpose:
As stated in the prompt, Truth's purpose was to relay a message about women's rights to her audience. Consider the following to help you further understand her purpose.

—What is Truth saying about women's rights? Do they need more or less? Who is going to give them these rights?
—When abolitionists spoke about slavery, who did they primarily speak for: slave men or slave women?
—When women's rights activists spoke out, who were they advocating for, white women or African-American women?

In this passage, Truth's purpose is quite clear: she is advocating for the rights of African-American women, a group that was often overlooked in discussions of civil rights.

Exigence:
Truth's motivation or exigence concluded from her message. Women are strong, capable, and deserving of the same rights as men. To prompt this analysis, consider the following:

—What have you learned about Truth through the lesson that would motivate her to persuade them to fight for equality?
—What assumptions do her and the audience have to agree on in order to accomplish her purpose?
—What universal truth is she discussing?

SUMMARY
Because many in the North supported the abolition of slavery, Truth was able to speak candidly about the hardships she encountered and her desire for equal rights for slaves and women.

Who was Sojourner Truth?
Sojourner Truth was an important activist for African-American and Women's Rights in the nineteenth century. She was born around 1797 in Swartekill, New York and was sold off at least four separate times in her childhood and early adulthood.

In her early childhood, she was owned by a Dutch family and spoke only Dutch. Her experience as a slave was filled with physical abuse, rape, and violence. Her fourth slavemaster beat her first husband to death. She adopted the name “Sojourner Truth” in 1843, claiming that God had called her to preach in the countryside. She supported the Union Army during the Civil War and challenged existing laws that treated African-Americans as property.

Since her death in 1881, Sojourner Truth has been considered one of the most important voices for civil rights in American history.

What is Exigence?
“Exigence” is the motivation behind the speaker’s purpose. It is often unsaid, which makes it challenging for students to discuss, but it is an important differentiator among essay scores because it allows for richer and deeper commentary. In order to analyze the exigence, you must first understand how the context, audience, and purpose connect to the speaker.
Passage

Well, children, where there is so much racket there must be something out of kilter. I think that ‘twixt the negroes of the South and the women at the North, all talking about rights, the white men will be in a fix pretty soon. But what’s all this here talking about?

That man over there says that women need to be helped into carriages, and lifted over ditches, and to have the best place everywhere. Nobody ever helps me into carriages, or over mud-puddles, or gives me any best place! And ain’t I a woman? Look at me! Look at my arm! I have ploughed and planted, and gathered into barns, and no man could head me! And ain’t I a woman? I could work as much and eat as much as a man—when I could get it—and bear the lash as well!

And ain’t I a woman? I have borne thirteen children, and seen most all sold off to slavery, and when I cried out with my mother’s grief, none but Jesus heard me! And ain’t I a woman?

Then they talk about this thing in the head; what’s this they call it? [member of audience whispers, “intellect”] That’s it, honey. What’s that got to do with women’s rights or negroes’ rights? If my cup won’t hold but a pint, and yours holds a quart, wouldn’t you be mean not to let me have my little half measure full?

Then that little man in black there, he says women can’t have as much rights as men, ‘cause Christ wasn’t a woman! Where did your Christ come from? Where did your Christ come from? From God and a woman! Man had nothing to do with Him.

If the first woman God ever made was strong enough to turn the world upside down all alone, these women together ought to be able to turn it back, and get it right side up again! And now they is asking to do it, the men better let them.

Obliged to you for hearing me, and now old Sojourner ain’t got nothing more to say.

Notes:
Passage

Well, children, where there is so much racket there must be something out of kilter. I think that ‘twixt the negroes of the South and the women at the North, Line all talking about rights, the white men will be in a fix pretty soon. But what’s all this here talking about?

That man over there says that women need to be helped into carriages, and lifted over ditches, and to have the best place everywhere. Nobody ever helps me into carriages, or over mud-puddles, or gives me any best place! And ain’t I a woman? Look at me! Look at my arm! I have ploughed and planted, and gathered into barns, and no man could head me! And ain’t I a woman? I could work as much and eat as much as a man—when I could get it—and bear the lash as well!

And ain’t I a woman? I have borne thirteen children, and seen most all sold off to slavery, and when I cried out with my mother’s grief, none but Jesus heard me! And ain’t I a woman?

Then they talk about this thing in the head; what’s this they call it? [member of audience whispers, “intellect”] That’s it, honey. What’s that got to do with women’s rights or negroes’ rights? If my cup won’t hold but a pint, and yours holds a quart, wouldn’t you be mean not to let me have my little half measure full?

Then that little man in black there, he says women can’t have as much rights as men, ‘cause Christ wasn’t a woman! Where did your Christ come from? Where did your Christ come from? From God and a woman! Man had nothing to do with Him.

If the first woman God ever made was strong enough to turn the world upside down all alone, these women together ought to be able to turn it back, and get it right side up again! And now they is asking to do it, the men better let them.

Obliged to you for hearing me, and now old Sojourner ain’t got nothing more to say.

Notes:
Passage

Well, children, where there is so much racket there must be something out of kilter. I think that ‘twixt the negroes of the South and the women at the North, Line all talking about rights, the white men will be in a fix pretty soon. But what’s all this here talking about?

That man over there says that women need to be helped into carriages, and lifted over ditches, and to have the best place everywhere. Nobody ever helps me into carriages, or over mud-puddles, or gives me any best place! And ain’t I a woman? Look at me! Look at my arm! I have ploughed and planted, and gathered into barns, and no man could head me! And ain’t I a woman? I could work as much and eat as much as a man—when I could get it—and bear the lash as well!

And ain’t I a woman? I have borne thirteen children, and seen most all sold off to slavery, and when I cried out with my mother’s grief, none but Jesus heard me! And ain’t I a woman?

Then they talk about this thing in the head; what’s this they call it? [member of audience whispers, “intellect”] That’s it, honey. What’s that got to do with women’s rights or negroes’ rights? If my cup won’t hold but a pint, and yours holds a quart, wouldn’t you be mean not to let me have my little half measure full?

Then that little man in black there, he says women can’t have as much rights as men, ‘cause Christ wasn’t a woman! Where did your Christ come from? Where did your Christ come from? From God and a woman! Man had nothing to do with Him.

If the first woman God ever made was strong enough to turn the world upside down all alone, these women together ought to be able to turn it back, and get it right side up again! And now they is asking to do it, the men better let them.

Obliged to you for hearing me, and now old Sojourner ain’t got nothing more to say.

Notes:

Commentary

10. To the women in her audience—decent, upstanding members of society, the vast majority of whom were wives and mothers—this is the most personal and emotional appeal she could possibly make. She continues to connect with her audience. While some of her listeners may not be able to relate to or identify with her strength, they may be able to connect to her as mother.

11. The majority of the women in the audience would identify themselves as Christians, which explains why saying none but Jesus heard me, would leave such a powerful impact. Not only did she have thirteen children and have to watch them sold off into slavery one after another, only having the freedom to grieve bitterly for them, but she also had to do it alone. No one would have the decency to come beside her and help her through each of her thirteen tragedies. Only Jesus, whom Sojourner and these women both worshipped, would hear both the cry of an enslaved woman and a free white woman and hold them in the same regard.

12. This is the fourth And ain’t I a woman? Yes, she is a woman, and it seems as if she’s more of a woman than anyone else. Her repetition of the question continues to draw her audience in, to remind these women of their own strength in the face of adversity.

13. Here again is one of her favorite rhetorical devices, the rhetorical question, being used to great effect. It gives her the chance to transition to her next argument and also inject another term of affection for an audience member—honey—on her way to enriching her case. This could also serve as a counter argument and refutation. She is a smart woman, and she is aware of the arguments that men make against women’s rights.

14. Here she concedes that even though she has less formal education and less intellect than her audience, she is still deserving of rights. (Wouldn’t it be mean, indeed.)
Passage

Well, children, where there is so much racket there must be something out of kilter. I think that ‘twixt the negroes of the South and the women at the North, Line all talking about rights, the white men will be in a fix 5 pretty soon. But what’s all this here talking about?

That man over there says that women need to be helped into carriages, and lifted over ditches, and to have the best place everywhere. Nobody ever helps me into carriages, or over mud-puddles, or gives me any 10 best place! And ain’t I a woman? Look at me! Look at my arm! I have ploughed and planted, and gathered into barns, and no man could head me! And ain’t I a woman? I could work as much and eat as much as a man—when I could get it—and bear the lash as well! 15 And ain’t I a woman? I have borne thirteen children, and seen most all sold off to slavery, and when I cried out with my mother’s grief, none but Jesus heard me! And ain’t I a woman?

Then they talk about this thing in the head; what’s 20 this they call it? [member of audience whispers, “intellect”] That’s it, honey. What’s that got to do with women’s rights or negroes’ rights? If my cup won’t hold but a pint, and yours holds a quart, wouldn’t you be mean not to let me have my little half measure full?

Then that little man in black there, he says women can’t have as much rights as men, ‘cause Christ wasn’t a woman! Where did your Christ come from? Where did your Christ come from? From God and a woman! 25 Man had nothing to do with Him.

If the first woman God ever made was strong enough to turn the world upside down all alone, these women together ought to be able to turn it back, and get it right side up again! And now they is asking to do it, the men better let them. 30

Obliged to you for hearing me, and now old Sojourner ain’t got nothing more to say.

Notes:
The Analysis Essay

Like the Synthesis essay, the Analysis essay has reading that you have to respond to. What makes the Analysis essay distinct is that there’s only one essay, which will be about a page long, and there’s no separate “reading time” for this one.

What Does “Analysis” Mean?
Read the instructions in the prompt carefully. They will say something like “write an essay in which you analyze the rhetorical strategies [the author] uses to convey his message.” To analyze means to explain how or why the author makes particular rhetorical choices, not just to list them or summarize the passage.

How to Analyze
The following gives a guideline for how much time to spend on each of the following steps, but these are not set in stone. As you practice, you can experiment with whether you’ll do better with a little more time for reading, a little more time for planning, exactly the suggested times, or something else.

1. Read—10 minutes
You have to read both the prompt (read it twice, to be sure you understand it) and the passage carefully. As you read the passage, think about the following points:
   1. Identify the relationship between the speaker, subject, and audience—often, much of this information can be found in the prompt of a Q2 essay.
   2. As you read the passage, chunk by primary points. This can be determined by asking yourself: “What is the author pointing out to the audience?” There may be one primary point for several paragraphs.
   3. Take note of textual evidence that appeals ethically, logically, or emotionally to the audience or strengthens the speaker’s credibility.
   4. Examine the speaker’s purpose for writing the passage. Consider which primary points best support his/her purpose.

2. Plan—2 minutes
Before you can start writing, you need to know what you’re going to write. Consider the following points to determine what you’ll write about in your essay:
   • Be sure you know what the argument is.
   • Choose the most important rhetorical choices you noted while you were reading. You likely won’t have time to discuss all of them, so make sure the ones you choose to discuss are the most effective ones.
   • Make a basic outline with a thesis and the idea for each paragraph.

3. Write—33 minutes
Monitor the time you spend writing, as the proctor won’t tell you when to move on to the next essay. For maximum success, follow these guidelines:
   • Write as fast as you can while still keeping your handwriting legible.
   • You do want to make clear that you understand what the argument is about, but don’t spend too much time summarizing or quoting the passage: the graders are familiar with it.
   • Remember to focus on the why and the how of the rhetorical devices:
     o Why did the author make that particular choice?
     o How does each choice help the author accomplish a particular goal?

Common Rhetorical Choices:
Rhetorical speakers will often manipulate their audience with one or more of the choices below. As you read the text, look for the evidence of the following:

Structure:
   • Juxtaposition literally means to place two things side by side. Authors use juxtaposition to discuss two contrasting or opposing ideas.
   • Parallelism is about expressing similar ideas in similar grammatical or syntactic structures.
   • Repetition involves repeating the same words or phrases a few times to make an idea clearer.

Figurative Language:
   • An allusion is a brief reference to a famous person, group, historical event, place, or work of art.
   • Irony is a figure of speech in which words are used in such a way that their intended meaning is different from the actual meaning of the words.
   • Imagery means to use figurative language to represent objects, actions, and ideas in such a way that it appeals to our physical senses.

Diction:
Often, a speaker will develop a specific tone throughout a passage, and this is accomplished using specific types of diction the author chooses. Ask yourself, how would you describe the word choice? What is the impact of such word choice?

Syntax:
Additionally, an author will manipulate the sentence structure to impact the audience. If an author incorporates several long or run-on sentences, they might mirror an extended period of mistreatment that the audience has endured.